TOGETHER IN FAITH

As mentioned last week, Rosary is deeply involved in discussions about our future, following the Together in Faith guidelines. A subcommittee of the Parish Council and the Finance Council was formed by Monsignor LeFevre to open discussions and explore the issues we must deal with, then report back to the two councils and to the entire parish. At a meeting this week, the committee reaffirmed our decision stated in 2012 that when the time came we would pursue merger talks with St. Aloysius and St. Patrick. The first step this committee sees involves getting to know parishioners from these two churches. Suggestions included sharing social activities, visiting each other's worship sites, joining together to plan projects, sharing bulletins, etc. This committee will continue to meet until more specific plans can be detailed—dates, actions, etc. Watch for updates!

Correction: Last week we incorrectly referred to Sacred Heart and St. Elizabeth parishes as being merged. They are not. They are clustered.

CELEBRATING CHANGES

Thanks to everyone who helped make our celebration last Sunday such a success. Almost all the honorees were able to be here. We had cupcakes, decorated by Alexia, one of the graduates, as well as cake and ice cream. Susan Rice surprised us with a great selection of “picnic food”—meatball, macaroni, potato salad, etc. All the honorees know Rosary is proud of their accomplishments. Best wishes for the future.

PETER'S PENCE COLLECTION

This weekend we are taking up the Peter's Pence collection, to provide funds specifically for the Pope to carry out his work with the needy, victims of disasters and wars, residents of dioceses that depend on the Church for support, Catholics being persecuted for their faith, refugees, etc. here in the United States and around the world. Through our donations, we become “pilgrims of charity,” joining the Church on its journey to spread Christ's love to those in need. Please be generous.

ROSARY FINANCES

Last weekend, 44 Offertory envelopes were used. The collection totaled $ 2060. As we prepare to begin a new fiscal year on July 1, our annual budget will include a new weekly financial goal. Watch for it!

A GIFT TO THE CHURCH

Martin Bucknarish is an engineer and designer who has found fulfillment in art work within the last few years. While concentrating on various forms of art he also has felt called to produce graphic representations of various churches and to present them to the churches. Rosary has been honored by his decision to give us his colored pencil and ink view of our church. He considers this a tribute to Fr. Morand. He would appreciate spreading the word about his new vocation. Watch for the drawing on our wall.

HOUSING IN HIGHLAND PARK

Three new single family homes on Midland Street in Highland Park are available for sale to NSP2 program eligible low-income buyers. There are conditions including homebuyer education, mortgage pre-approval and family size/income requirements. Contact Mr. Richard Cannon, 313-252-0050 ext.258.

BLOOD DRIVE

Don't forget the blood drive today, Sunday, at Sacred Heart Parish, 8 AM to 2 PM, in the activities building 3451 Rivard.

A VISIT FROM OLD FRIENDS

We were happy to see Loveth Ezike and her children at Mass. Loveth and her husband, Elias were active members of Rosary over ten years ago, and two of their children, Chibueze and Natachi, were baptized here. They are doing well in Texas. We made them feel most welcome at Rosary.

PROGRESS REPORT—SHAUN & WES

Shaun and Wes Nethercott are bicycling across the country. Here is their first report:

Sunday, June 23, 2013T+1: It's About Time

NEW BUFFALO, MICHIGAN: We got out of town on time, much to our surprise and exhaustion. The last few days have been a marathon of endless work and stress, trying so hard to make sure we are leaving the systems of our life intact. The transition in our house goes well. Our demented dog, Louie, is in love...not with the house sitter, but with her dog. This was a bit of risk, bringing in a house sitter with her two animals, a dog and a cat. However, she is obviously an animal person, and we have been very concerned that Louie, who is so connected to us, and has very limited coping skills, would absolutely freak out. Her dog, Tucker, outweighs Louie by at least 40 pounds. He is gentle and well behaved. Louie follows him around and watches everything he does. Tucker has basic dog skills, like coming to "Come" and drinking from a bowl. Louie follows Tucker in and watches with great interest as Tucker slurps water from a metal dish. Whether Louie overcomes his great aversion to all things metal remains to be seen, but it is astonishing to see how much Louie has relaxed to be around this big, calm dog.

The cats are less happy. There is some spitting and arching, but it is too early to tell whether war or acceptance is the future of the cats' relationship. Mimi, in particular, seems to be in high dudgeon. She is mad about being kept in after her escape earlier in the week. Then there was that rotten visit to the veterinarian. Riding in the car is always a hated experience for this cat, and it is made much worse by getting shots. She seems under the weather and lethargic before the entrance of the new cat Bailey. When we leave, she is sulking on top of the entertainment armoire. I try to coax her down for a goodbye snug, but she is not having it. All we can do is hope for the best. The exit from Matrix was far from smooth. The thanking process after the fund-raiser had major problems, made worse by critical absences by staff, contractors, and volunteers. A task that should have been done easily, well, and quickly stretched out for days, then weeks, leaving me to sign apology notes and re-issued thank you's late, late, late on Friday night. It excites the fear in me that has been sitting at the base of my spine for months. Will anyone, in the words of my favorite Marge Piercy poem, "do what has to be done, again, and again" for Matrix? Will it be the first order of attention for anyone? Then I wonder: Is that even required? I am depending on a kind of radical trust to step away, even though there is a nagging voice in my head, whispering fearful doubts. I make myself remember all the heart and time and effort staff and board have brought to Matrix for years. I tell myself to get over myself and quit being such a narcissist.

I close my mind to this riddling voice. I know, oh so well, that my work-life has been unbalanced and unhealthy for years. I have to let it go, for my own good, if nothing else. This is not easy. It is necessary. It is better to believe in good. Good comes best where good believes most. Or so I tell myself.

We got on the road at 11:08 am. Our goal was 11:00 am. By the time we get to Chelsea, it starts to dawn on us that we have left. Wes gives me a fist-bump. It is not long before I am sleeping fitfully in my seat. I wake up with a sore and clanging neck, but see that we are entering the big forests of West Michigan. We peer up the Kalamazoo River, looking either for kayaks or for remains of the devastating oil spill. Neither can be seen. We wait for the turn south that signals the approach of Lake Michigan. We make the turn and look for exits to the Red Arrow Highway. We have traveled this country quite a bit on our way back and forth from Wyoming, and seeing our favorite shops is a welcome relief. We are on our way to our 1st night's lodging when we see the turn off to the Warren Dunes State Park, with one of the finest beaches on Lake Michigan. Shall we? We shall.

We turn from the prescribed path, and in a few moments, we are taking our pasty white, excessively large selves gingerly into the brisk, clear waters of Lake Michigan. We both know that a sudden plunge into the water is the best way, but we dither and giggle and squeal as the cool water laps against ever higher parts of our body. It is not long before we are swimming and floating, marveling at the mountains of sand and the thousands of people up and down the shores. For the first time in days, I can feel my neck release. Out of the water, we relax on the sand, and people watch with great delight, then decide to swim again. On the way out of the park, we stop at a farm stand and buy fresh picked strawberries and cherries. Both are incredibly sweet and delicious.

A few hours later, we are in our room. We are pleased that the trip is already working. The trip to lake is just the first step of giving ourselves the time to be fully alive, not embedded in our fear or bound by the knots of our own making. It is early morning now. The sun has not yet risen. I have awakened nearly every hour all night long...still agitated by the amount of adrenalin coursing in my stress-addled veins. When this day finally arrives, it brings a new order, a day in which time is no longer the enemy, but a delicious new freedom to explore and just be. It's about time.

CONGRATULATIONS!

Rosary honored those celebrating changes in their lives: Alexia Rowell, George Rayes, Mary Blaney, Caitlyn Clarke, Lauren Hollier, Nora Rayes, Wilson Suprpto, Cecilia Pope, Alan Zaciek and Cordelia Ziraldo.

Every celebration has to have cupcakes, cake and ice cream.

Susan surprised us all with a wonderful selection of “real” food which turned our celebration into a real party!

Eylonne congratulates Caitlyn on all her hard work.
